Report on Training Programme on Hygiene Products Preparation (9/8/2023)

Organized by the Department of Chemistry, Venue: Auditorium

On August 9, 2023, the Department of Chemistry organized a training programme on the preparation of hygiene products, aimed at first-year students from various departments of the college. The event was held in the auditorium and was conducted under the guidance of Ms. Amitha and Ms. Pournami, who provided expert instruction on the methods for creating everyday hygiene products.

The training session introduced students to the formulation and preparation of essential hygiene items such as hand sanitizers, soaps, and surface disinfectants. The facilitators explained the basic chemistry behind these products, focusing on the safety and efficacy of the ingredients used. Emphasis was placed on how students could prepare these products in a cost-effective manner using easily accessible materials.

The programme was highly interactive, with students participating in live demonstrations and hands-on sessions. They were encouraged to experiment with making their own hygiene products, which not only empowered them with practical knowledge but also promoted sustainable living by reducing dependency on commercial products.

The session also touched upon the importance of maintaining proper hygiene, especially in the context of public health. Students left the event feeling motivated to adopt these methods in their daily lives, while also being more mindful of the environmental impact of hygiene products. The department received positive feedback, with many students expressing interest in further workshops on similar topics.

The training programme also highlighted the growing significance of self-reliance in personal care, encouraging students to embrace a do-it-yourself (DIY) approach. By preparing their own hygiene products, students could ensure the use of natural and safe ingredients, reducing exposure to harmful chemicals often found in commercial products.

The session fostered a sense of creativity and resourcefulness, as students were able to customize products to suit their personal preferences. This initiative not only promoted hygiene awareness but also served as a potential entrepreneurial opportunity for students interested in starting small-scale ventures in hygiene product manufacturing.

Overall, the programme was well-received, with many students gaining practical skills that could be applied in both personal and community settings. The Department of Chemistry plans to organize more such workshops in the future to continue fostering awareness about the importance of hygiene and sustainable practices.
