Scientific Reading is an important skill required for any type of research. As undergraduate students, the University of Calicut prescribes group projects for them and each post graduate student is required to do individual projects.
MANAV- the human atlas program is a initiative under the Department of Biotechnology in association with IISER, Pune. They conduct various programs which create awareness among students and also aim to create a database using students as a human resource. As a continuation of the program conducted last year where a webinar was conducted for the students on "How to read Scientific Literature", the initiative has tried to an awareness of how much the students can understand scientific literature. This self-assessment module aims at making the students realize where they stand in understanding scientific literature.

Dr. V, Neetha, Assistant Professor of the Department of Zoology is a faculty coordinator for this program. In order to conduct the program smoothly, the coordinator was first instructed on how the students were to proceed and the role of the coordinator in the program through a webinar interaction. 33 students registered under this program under Dr. V. Neetha and were able to complete the self-assessment module. Each student were first required to choose one of the three subjects namely microbiology, pharmacy and biotechnology. In their chosen fields they were given a journal article. They were then required to answer questions based on the article and were graded according to their level of understanding. The students were then given participation certificates.

Outcome – the students were able to make a self-assessment of their levels of understanding scientific literature.
